

‘The Mafia’

written in T<sub>E</sub>X

The Mafia

by

Kit Johnstone, Ph.D.

They are here, the mafia, in various kinds, from Japan to the United Kingdom and, I guess, in most other places. We had known for decades that the oil was running out, but it all had been hushed up while we should have been busy trying harder to find replacement energies; all but for the oil mafia.

Worse are those who need money without having something like the petroleum, they need turn to drugs, human trafficking and whatnots. Then you have, for example drugs mafia and mafia arranging marrying couples between richer and poorer countries.

More hypocritical perhaps are literary and publishing mafia, they play politics that depends on who know whom and encourage plagiarism if it gives them profits. They have not all begun as mafia, but these latter through their quest for power and profit are attracted to them like a magnet. It is also the case with technology, which allows mafia magnates to mastermind confusion raised by things like spam, worm and virus; then from the disoriented and disheartened mass they could reap their profit and commit all kinds of crime. We live in fear and distrust for friends, then ourselves in wrecks our works in ruins they mowed us down one by one and make us their slaves. Satan and mafia has the same mentality that whoever is not for them is against them, Christ on the other hand said whoever are not against us are for us.

Kit Tyabandha, Ph.D.
Wilderness, 2010